Immersed in the whispers of history that resonate silently around us, we talk about a reality that many are familiar with: the subculture of e-girls and e-boys.

It is more than a passing fad or an internet trend; it is a profound expression of the experiences and influences that define Generation Z.

The terms e-boys and e-girls, generally identified as e-kids, refer to the Generation Z girls and boys who are part of a youth subculture that emerged during the second half of the 2010s, whose style draws inspiration from hip-hop and emo culture, Japanese street fashion, such as anime, cosplay, kawaii and lolita fashion.

The return to the 2000s saw a revival of y2k baggy jeans, associated with rappers and musicians of those years such as 50 Cent, Eminem and Jay-Z. But let's not stop there.

The British magazine i-D awarded Avril Lavigne the title of 'first e-girl', for her refined interpretation of alternative style, in contrast to the style trends of the time and in affinity with kawaii culture.

With regard to the development of the e-boy subculture Lil Peep is considered one of the most influential artists during the early 2010s.

Behind the clothing there is a story of notes and experimentation. It's a story about identity and the search for a sense of belonging in an increasingly connected yet increasingly fragmented world.

Yet, perhaps what really distinguishes the e-kids subculture is its innate nostalgia for the early 2000s, a time when Tumblr reigned supreme as a virtual refuge for self-expression.

The term nostalgia is derived from Greek and is a word composed of νόστος (return) and ἄλγος (pain): it therefore means 'pain of return'.

This collection is therefore developed by capturing the essence of a bygone but never forgotten era.

The fabrics and materials in the collection are intended to reflect the versatility and individuality of the subject matter, with soft fabrics juxtaposed with structured fabrics to create a balance between dreamlike and real.

The colours are bright, starting with the silver bomber jacket, and alternating with darker tones to denim.

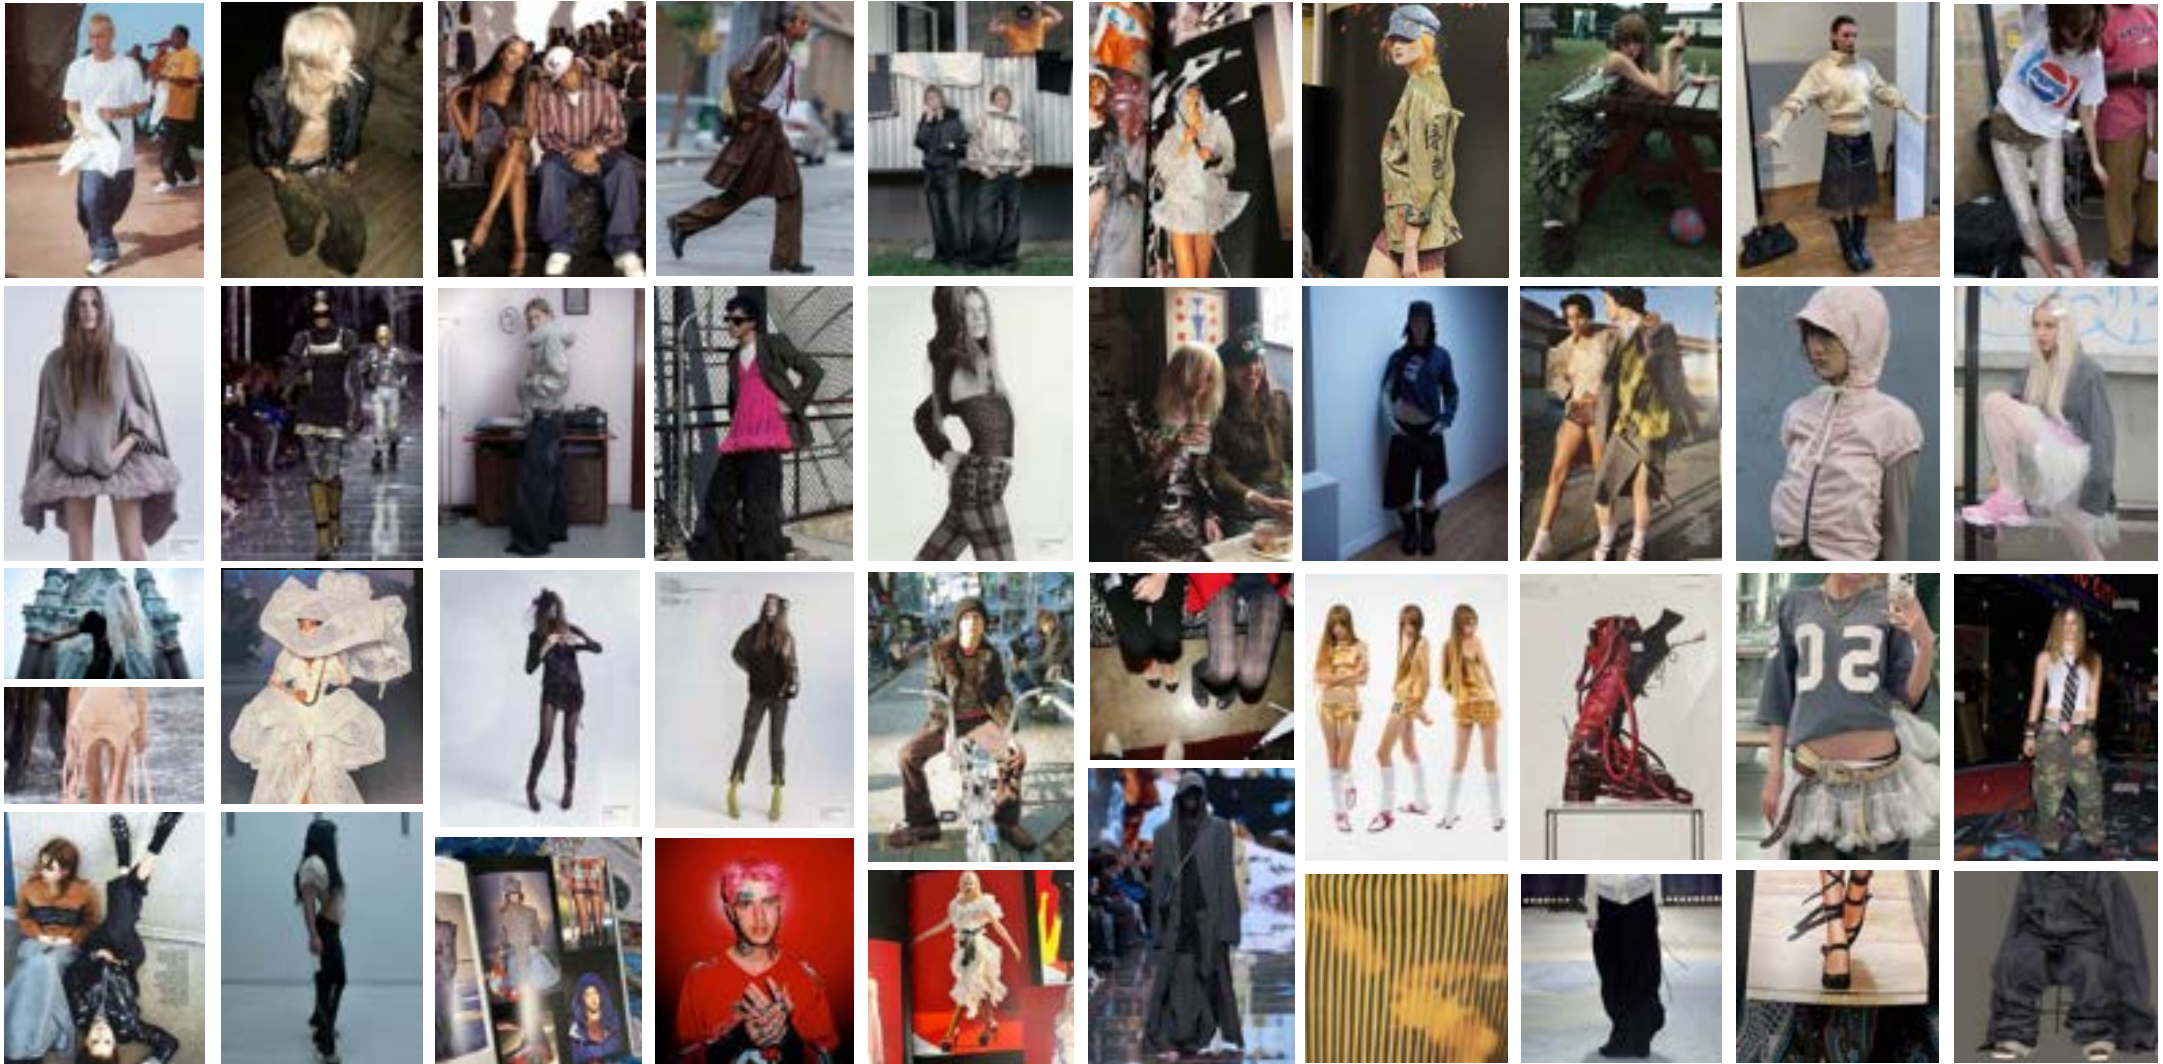

Printed leather and glitter add a touch of playful eccentricity.

The layering of different fabric layers is a key element of the collection, evoking the sense of layering influences that define e-kids. It is a journey through the experiences that characterise an entire generation.

THEIR KINDNESS IS CHARADE?

ETHEREAL DREAM

These works are part of a trilogy based on the concept of dreams, ethereal, nostalgia, silences and love poems.

Each collection is developed from a concept, an imaginary, a message that is develop into the clothes. These are shape and sewn by me, including the pattern making.

These collections are therefore the result of a creative research carried out with love.

Thanks for reading :)
